Not illustrated. 1876 Excerpt: . . . mind with the sad sense of the ever-recurring problems that, under the most favourable circumstances, accompany the progress of mankind. These hundred years of independence have not taught the American Republic how to blend heterogeneous races into one common life, any more than the institutions of the older world. The aboriginal owners of the soil remain in sullen discontent, or burst into violences that now seem to approach the bitter end. Congress may decree civil rights to the coloured race, but sentiment and manners will not ratify the Act, even among those who have made the largest sacrifices in the cause of free humanity. It is not for us, with the West Indian outbreak in our memory and the East Indian enigma before us, to indulge in any invidious comparisons: perhaps we should be the humbler of the two. Again: although it was believed, and with much truth, that in the complete education of the people America had made a decided advance on Europe, yet the reconciliation of intellectual development with the religious requirements of different sects, and especially with the demands of the Roman Catholic Church, is becoming so critical a question, that it may turn the Presidential election. So also with the intimate relations of Capital and Labour: while the space of the United States gives, as it were, a means of escape from the difficulty that is existing in our crowded and depressed population, the maintenance of human freedom against collective tyranny will...
