Excerpt: . but the chiefs having stated that their escort would not be 1842 ready until the day after, the departure was postponed. During the last fortnight the ground had been covered with snow, the thermometer being as low as zero. The force on leaving Cabul consisted of about four thousand five hundred fighting men, and the camp followers, women and children amounted to about three times that number: the strength of the 44th was nineteen officers and four hundred and thirty-eight fighting men, in which numbers were included Brigadier Shelton, twelve boys, and thirty-four sick. At nine o'clock in the morning of the 6th of January, 6 Jan. the advance, under Brigadier Anquetil, consisting of the 44th, with some Sappers and Miners, one squadron of Irregular Horse, and three mountain train guns, moved off. The main column was commanded by Brigadier Shelton, and...
