Vol. V Fayette County Common Pleas. In this respect, this case is on all fours with the case of Needles v. Needles, 1 O. S. R. 432. There, Philemon Needles, the testator had, prior to the passage of the statute providing for advancements in personalty, and prior to the making of his will, given various sums to his children and taken receipts for the same. The supreme court, in deciding that case, say-- The several advancements which had been made to his four sons-in-law, -for which he had taken their receipts, must have been in his contemplation when he made his will. How much he had previously advanced to his other children, does not appear in this case. But it is fair to presume that in view of all of his previous advancements, he made such a distribution of his property by his will as he...
