

Reverse Discrimination in EC Law

By Alina Tryfonidou

Kluwer Law International. Hardback. Book Condition: new. BRAND NEW, Reverse Discrimination in EC Law, Alina Tryfonidou, The spectre of reverse discrimination arises when it can be shown that a group is treated more favourably than another group that is normally favoured, as a consequence of positive action measures. Until recently, EC jurisprudence has consistently rejected allegations that reverse discrimination emerging in the context of the Community's internal market policy is an EC problem, reinforcing its commitment to 'positive action' as a facilitator of cross-border economic activities. However, with the advent of EU citizenship (in terms of persons) and the formal completion of the internal market (in terms of trade), it is now possible to meaningfully ask: Is reverse discrimination still a permissible form of differential treatment in the Community? Or should it now be considered, first, an unjustified difference in treatment between Union citizens (and thus a violation of the general principle of equality), and, second, an unacceptable distortion of the conditions of competition in a properly-functioning market? This important new book opens with an in-depth analysis of the 'linking factor' test that has implicitly been developed by the European Courts for determining whether a situation is purely internal to...
